

Bayesian Empirical Likelihood methods for Complex Survey Data

Changbao Wu

University of Waterloo

We provide an overview of Bayesian empirical likelihood methods for complex survey data. We examine the general framework for Bayesian analysis on finite population parameters and the desire for achieving certain robustness of posterior inference under the traditional design-based framework. We also highlight computational challenges for posterior inference involving high dimensional parameters and discuss some recent advances on approximations using variational Bayesian methods.